Right-wing journalists can be obsessive over “evidence” of corruption by those in charge of the federal government, of which the Trump administration is no exception. On Wednesday morning, Fox News host Pete Hegseth aired a clip from MSNBC's Morning Joe in which Joe Scarborough and Mika Brzezinski argued that the Trump administration was holding back on providing some information about the deadly attack on an American diplomatic outpost in Benghazi, Libya, that resulted in the death of four Americans. Scarborough asked Hegseth to react to the reason the administration had provided information about the attack just a day before. “Why did the Obama administration hold back the documents about Benghazi?” Scarborough asked Hegseth, referring to the fact that four Americans died in the attack on the Benghazi consulate. “They didn’t wait one day to release the documents. There was lots of evidence that the Obama administration was hiding it because they knew it was bad for their presidency.” Hegseth agreed that there was a lot of evidence that suggested the Obama administration withheld information about the attack. But, as with all of the other investigations into Trump’s administration, Hegseth went further than Scarborough in his consideration of the attack in Libya and the Obama administration’s response. He suggested there was evidence that the Obama administration had covered up the attack. Hegseth cited Fox News reporting on a State Department email from Clinton’s aide, Huma Abedin, that appeared to show that the State Department had been aware of the attack in Benghazi for more than an hour, but was not told about it until after the attacks began. “You could see the State Department was already aware of the attack,” Hegseth said. “She also took a call from Mrs. Clinton with the situation and the attack was still going on.” Scarborough, Brzezinski,
