Apple is still struggling to lower iPhone X demand, however Apple currently supplies 30 percent of the world's new smartphones, says an analyst. This compares to a global market share of 24 percent for Samsung and 18 percent for Huawei. More than a week has passed since Apple unveiled the iPhone X and Apple now faces a wide array of problems. This includes the iPhone X becoming a limited edition product, supply constraints and a high price. According to a new analysis from Bloomberg, Apple's market share of smartphones has slipped. Although the tech giant still occupies a large market share, it's down to 30 percent from 34 percent in 2016. These numbers compare to Samsung's world market share of 24 percent and Huawei's 18 percent. Apple is still considered a huge name in the tech industry, however, in the past, the company has struggled to compete with Chinese rivals. The iPhone maker has also been facing difficulties with mass production of the iPhone X. Bloomberg notes that Apple has been forced to consider opening new iPhone factories to keep up with demand for the $1,000 device. Huawei and Samsung accounted for the vast majority of global smartphone sales in 2016, according to a recent report from Gartner. The research firm predicted that Apple would remain a dominant player in the smartphone industry.

It has been a while since I made a patch for a port, but it's time I make one for Gargoyle. Gargoyle is a very fun game, but has a few frustrating issues. First off, Gargoyle is a non-linear game. There is no storyline, you just play as a little sloth and you have to jump on blocks and watch the platforms above you while avoiding spikes. There are a few different paths to the top, but there is no way to get back to a point you were at. As a matter of fact, when you finish a level you have to start all over at the bottom. So, when you die, you start the level over and can't
